Injury Prevention Guidelines

Today's volunteer hockey trainer plays an important role in the safety and well-being of a team. By implementing an injury prevention program, trainer's can have a significant impact in reducing the chances of accidental injury.

Due to the fast moving nature of the game of hockey and the inevitable contact of the player's body with the ice, boards, sticks or opponents, some injuries will still occur. It is not possible to eliminate all injuries, however, by careful planning, preparation and knowledgeable care of an injured player, risk of serious injury can be minimized. Prior to and during the season, the following injury prevention guidelines should be examined and referred to:

⇒ Encourage proper physical conditioning and strength building. Particular attention should be paid to the following muscle groups: quadriceps, biceps, shoulders, chest and waist.

Trainer's Corner

⇒ Be sure that equipment is adequate, properly fitted to the player and evaluated on a regular basis.

⇒ Know how to recognize minor injuries (e.g., strains, sprains, cuts) that can be complicated by continued participation and develop into more serious injuries.

⇒ Know the proper first aid procedures and have a well stocked first aid kit.

⇒ Ensure that following an injury, effective treatment is carried out and the athlete is properly rehabilitated before allowed to return to competition.

⇒ To minimize the risk of re-injury and maximize the effectiveness of the player, reconditioning should be undertaken.

⇒ Initial return to competition should be phased in using short shifts and graduated, controlled return to play. Gradual return to competition is of greatest importance where injuries to large muscle groups (e.g., upper legs) or joints of the body have occurred.

Gary Roberts Eat To Compete Challenge

The Ontario Minor Hockey Association [OMHA] teamed up with a famous NHL alumni and launched the Gary Roberts Eat To Compete Challenge, a contest to help OMHA players to develop better nutrition habits for a healthier approach to hockey and life.

The OMHA and Roberts launched the challenge at the Gary Roberts High Performance Centre at the Fitness Institute in North York, Ontario. The contest details are published in the March 2012 issue of Hometown Hockey Magazine, the OMHA's membership magazine, which is arriving at members' homes this week. Hometown Hockey goes out to 100,000 family households and is read by 340,000 players and families each issue.

The magazine is also available online www.hometownhockey.com and the contest details online at www.hometownhockey.com/garyroberts.

OMHA players on participating teams will follow and track their healthy eating over a 10 week period starting on March 1st, earning points for their good eating and discipline. Players that earn a minimum of 500 points will have their names entered into a draw and there are three prizes: the grand prize winner will receive a prize for their entire team, including a day of education and training with the former NHLer at the Gary Roberts High Performance Centre at the Fitness Institute in North York, Ontario, and a nutrition seminar led by Roberts and Nature's Emporium. Their day at the centre will also be the subject of a feature in Hometown Hockey Magazine, and they'll walk away from the event wearing free OMHA gear.

Roberts, a graduate of the OMHA's Whitby Wildcats, had a great NHL career that almost ended at the age of the 30 when he suffered a broken neck. He turned to exercise and diet to heal and surprised many with a comeback that saw him play another 12 years. He's now an expert in the areas of sports training and nutrition. Now he advises some NHL current stars including OMHA graduate Steven Stamkos on nutrition so they optimize what their body can do on the ice.

"Players want to compete hard on the ice to chase that NHL dream," Roberts said. "Healthy eating plays a huge role in building a body that can compete harder and faster. There are foods that will give a player a natural edge to do more, both on the ice and in life."

To help players and their families put together a menu plan, Roberts and Hometown Hockey have published the Gary Roberts Grocery List and Recipe Book.

"We hope that players who take the initiative to participate in this competition will learn to develop a healthier lifestyle," said the OMHA President Joyce Junker. "We want all of our players to be healthy, and to enjoy playing the game of hockey their entire lives. We are confident that the lessons learned from this competition will benefit not only our players but also their families."

This contest is only open to players from teams that are in the OMHA. There are three team prizes in the contest. Grand prize winner and his or her team receive:

- An entire day at the Gary Roberts High Performance Centre located within the Fitness Institute in North York Ont.
- A seminar on nutrition led by Gary Roberts at Nature's Emporium
- A Question and Answer Session with Gary Roberts
- A workout with Gary and his nutritionists
- Including a dynamic Warmup, Workout and Cool-down
- Post workout meal prepared by Nature's Emporium
- Feature in a future OMHA Hometown Hockey Magazine
- Up to 25 shirts OMHA T

Second place prize includes:

- Autographed Leafs 7 GR jersey
- Nike Workout Package, with shorts, bag bottle and hat
- Nature's Emporium High Performance nutrition and perishable health related snack and meal items

Third Place Prize includes:

- Autographed Leafs 7 GR jersey
- OMHA Hoodie

ODHA Prepares to Host 2012 Under-17 Provincial Camp

The Ottawa District Hockey Association (ODHA) will host the 2012 Provincial Under-17 camp from July 3-8, 2012 in Cornwall, Ontario. The Under-17 camp will feature 84 of the top 16-year-old high performance male hockey players in the province from four OHF Member Partners (ALLIANCE, GTHL, NOHA, OMHA) as well as the Ottawa District Hockey Association (ODHA) and Hockey Northwestern Ontario (HNO).
